

Washington Dec. 19, 1855

My Dear friend

Since I closed and mailed my regular letter to you yesterday I received yours of the 20th. Of course you are excused and perfectly excusable. What I have written you will have done with before this reaches you.

Yesterday was the first day of this session on which incidents worth noticing in a correspondence have occurred. The day was given to discussion in the House. There were some strange developments made. Evidences of bargain and trickery on the part of the opposition very humiliating. They are a weak set. The seventy Democrats are more strength than their one hundred and fifty nine fusionists. They are "founded in iniquity & cannot flourish." You will see the debates. Get those of the 18th for your benefit as well as edification. The d---nd hounds must be routed.

Best respects to all friends. Let me hear from you at this place. You shall continue to hear from me privately if not publicly.

The Lord bless you.

Yours sincerely

Butler P. Anderson

Washington Dec. 19. 1855

My Dear friend

Since I closed and mailed my regular letter to you yesterday I received yours of the 20th ^{Oct.} - of course yours are excused and perfectly excusable. What I have written you will have done with before this reaches you.

Yesterday was the first day of this session on which incidents worth noticing in a correspondence have occurred. The day was given to discussion in the House. There were some strange developments made. Evidence of dishonesty and trickery on the part of the opposition very humiliating. They are a weak set. The twenty Democrats are more strength than three hundred and fifty nine Unionists. They are "founded in iniquity & cannot flourish". You will do the debate. Get those of the 18th for your benefit as well as edification. The old hands must be routed.

Best respects to all friends. Let me hear from you at this place. You shall continue to hear from me privately, if not publicly.

The South lies you
Yours sincerely
Butler P. Anderson