Dear Sir:

The Statesman arrived here this evening. I think every Republican should be satisfied with the manner you present their proceedings to your Democratic readers, and I as one of them thank you at and heartily. The little squib about our platform I suspect came from Billy - tell him such belligerous sentiments should not be taken to the bed of a young as the poor girl may suffer from his disposition to pitch into somebody and if he continues to indulge in his dark insinuations I shall be tempted to tell his wife when I see her, how he attempted to suckle the miners out South, but who preferred the matured pass of the Arkansas Traveller to the excesencies of his juvenility, and as the Democrats have done more towards their own overthrow than their firmest opposers could hope for by severing the brains from the body, I should were I a member of the Legislature vote for a Douglas Democrat in preference to a slavery propagandist. For the Douglas view of the Slavery question is about as near Republicanism as the price of a Democrat will as yet permit him to avow, but there is little question in my mind where such Democrats will be found in 1860,- certainly not at Charleston.

Yours truly,

Jesse Applegate

Sir, The Statesman arrived here this evening.

I think every Republican should be satisfied ^{with} the manner you present their proceedings to your Democratic readers, and I as one of them thank you at once and heartily. The little squib about our flat-

I suspect came from Billy - Tell him such ^{belles} ~~things~~ ^{sentiments} should not be taken to the bed of a young ^{as the poor girl may suffer from his disposition to pitch into somebody,} and if he continues to indulge in his dark in-nuations I shall be tempted to tell his wife when she see her, how he attempted to suckle the miners out South, but who prepared the material part of the Arkansas Traveller to the excessencies of his juvenility, and as the Democrats have done more towards their own overthrow than their firmest opposers could hope for by severing the trains from the body, I should were I a member of the Legislature vote for a Douglas Democrat in preference to a slavery propagandist.

For the Douglas view of the Slavery question is about as near Republicanism as the price of a dollar will as yet permit him to avow, but there is no question in my mind where such Democrats will be found in 1860. - certainly not at Charleston.

Yours truly,

Jose Applegate.
