Dear Sir

Yours returning Senator Nesmith's letter has been received, and were it not I am now in the very heat and fervor of my farm labors I should be tempted to take up the gauntlet you throw down in respect to some of my radical friends.

I think it quite likely the Senator will be offended with both of us about the "extract" - with me for exposing a private letter, and with you for so toning down his expressions to suit the ears of the pious and delicate, as to make them commonplace and insipid. And I think myself the people would have forgiven the profanity of his "abpirgations" in consideration of their justice.

The speech you enclose, I had seen before,- it is perhaps every word true, but when time, place, and circumstance is considered, I do not think it "fitly spoken" by a loyal senator. It also so happens that I know something of the history of friend Rector's letter published in the Mountaineer. It was stolen from "anager" by a little Sessessionist of the "knot-hole" order by the name of Jay and sent to Pat for publication in the Union, but Pat was too decent a man to publish a stolen letter, and left the dirty work to the Mountaineer, with the other "debris" of the Union.

Yours Truly,

Jesse Applegate

Dear Sir

Your returning Senator Nesmith's letter has been received, and were it not I am now in the very heat and fever of my farm labors I should be tempted to take up the gauntlet you throw down in respect to some of my radical friends..

I think it quite likely the Senator will be offended with both of us about the "extracts" - with me for exposing a private letter, and with you for setting down his expressions to suit the ears of the pious and clericals, as to make them commonplace and insipid. And I think myself the people would have forgiven the profanity of his "abjurations" in consideration of their justice.

The Speech you enclose I had seen before - it is perhaps every word true, but when time place, and circumstance is considered, I do not think it "fittly spoken" by a loyal Senator. - It also so happens that I know something of the history of friend Hector's letter published in The Mountaineer. - It was stolen from "Encamp" by a little Separatist of the "knot-hole" order by the name of Fay and sent to Pat for publication in The Union, but Pat was too decent a man to publish a stolen letter, and left the dirty work to The Mountaineer, with the other "debris" of The Union.

Yours Truly
